Five young people in college

The Beth-Tikva family.

Beth-Tikva is truly a house of hope. Every day, I see that hope shining in the eyes of every child who calls this place home. Each year, I am blessed with the opportunity to witness their happiness and excitement as they proudly put on their school uniforms, uniforms that they themselves have learned to make, and prepare for another school year.

A new year, a new class, and another step toward a brighter future. Today, I am very happy to share another reason for hope and celebration. Of the 26 children at Beth-Tikva, three young women and two young men are now attending university in Haiti.

Five young people in college

This is an important milestone in their lives and a wonderful achievement for the entire Beth-Tikva family. From learning to make their own school uniforms to pursuing a university education, each step represents growth, determination, and hope for a better future. We are deeply proud of them and grateful to everyone who helps make these opportunities possible.

Haiti's hope

Someone whom I valued greatly used to remind the Haitian people, whenever he spoke with them, that the answer to Haiti's problems lies in the hands of Haitians themselves. Today, as I look at these five young people taking this important step toward a university education, those words resonate with me more than ever. They remind us that education is not only about preparing for a career. It is about giving young people the knowledge, confidence, and opportunity to become active participants in building the future of their country.

I would like to conclude with the words of Winston Churchill: "Give us the tools, and we will finish the job." These five young people have the determination and the desire to build their future. Our responsibility is to help provide them with the tools and opportunities they need to succeed. These young women and young men are part of Haiti's hope. By investing in them today, we are investing in a better tomorrow for Haiti.
